From the Lastenscorth Herald.

In these latter days of radical extremes when the wildest ideas are boldly advanced, and the most ultra theories eagerly embraced, the virtue of conservatism, like the brightest of jewels, is valuable by the reason of its rarity. Not that there are not those who profess to be guided by its calm suggestions, but that they are only comparatively so, and claim a wondrous heap of credit because they do not follow where crack-brained fanatics would lead. Conservatism is a com-mon word—it is the professed creed of every one; yet common as it is, as a word and as a faith, it is perhaps the most uncommon and unfrequent of all of our car-dinal virtues. There are few that understand its nature, even fewer than the number of those who follow its simple teachings, and whilst we claim no peculiar exemption from the general ignorance, we propose to give our views upon the subject, even though they serve to illustrate our position that it is so little understood.

No man can be conservative, unless he has the spirit of submission to authority, fully developed in his nature. He must premise that his judgment is not infalli-ble, and that his reasoning faculties are as apt to be warped by his feelings as those of other men. He must know how to make the proper distinction between firmness and obstinacy, and when superior authority has stamped the ideas of his opponents with the impress and sanction the law, he must subject his private opinion to public statutes. This may be done without abating his original convic-tions, and if it is not done, cheerfully and promptly, the refractory individual becomes, in our estimation, a radical.

Again he must form his opinion from deliberate and dispassionate investigation, and not permit the thought to be offspring of the wish. This is a common error and with an impulsive man is almost in evitable. Toleration is also absolutely requisite in the composition of a conservative. He must think it possible for others to entertain views diametrically op posed to his own, without regarding their originator as either knave or fool.

He must be an independent thinker, for no man can be impartial who pins his faith to another's sleeve. In fact, such a person cannot properly be said to occupy any fixed position. He must be a national man, for sectionalism is based upon local and selfish interest and prevents the possessor from taking that broad and comprehensive view which justice and equity require at his hands. To be truly conservative, a man must be just, sincere and patriotic, for whilst he may be cool in his temperament, and rational in his conclusions, yet if he is not strictly just and honest he will refuse to accord to his opponents what his judg-ment dictates to be their rights. He must be, to some extent, an incredulous man-not believing every floating on dit, but calmly deferring the formation of his opinion, until time shall have confirmed or refuted the rumor, and all parties concerned have been fully represented. He should demand proof for all things which his own senses or his own judgment do not at once demonstrate to be beyond the possibility.

He should be frank and candid in his disposition, as the over suspicious man in judging others by the standard of his own base nature, overleaps the truth more frequently than he attains it.

understanding—is utterly incapable of overcoming his natural warp sufficiently to do justice to his fellow-men,

Applying these essentials to the great American staple for thought and conversation-to politics-and remembering that it is the most absorbingly interesting and exciting theme upon which we sovereigns can dilate, we ask, how many of us BASSETT & BRACKETT, Surveyors and ourselves among those who stand upon the broad platform of conservatism?—
How many are there who can say that the interest they feel in the functions of the ballot-box does not proceed rather from partizan zeal than patriotic and unselfish impulses? And in our own beloved mpulses? And in our own beloved Territory, where the wrinkles in the front of grim-visaged war have scarcely given place to the serene smiles of gentle peace, stood. Yet all will acknowledge its superior claims upon us; all will perhaps confess their deviations from its paths, and still how seldom do we meet men who have, from deliberate conviction, ceased "to know the right, and yet the wrong pursue!" But for the future we confidently hope a different order of

Time has arrived when the great sectional issue is settled upon a firm basis, and we must direct our attention to topic of more immediate and urgent importance. Kansas must be developed; her rich alluvial unfold her hidden treasures to the light of heaven; her mines of wealth explored till their untold beauties sparkle before an astonished world; her cities commence to amass the solid elements of wealth, and the whole body politic be welded with the iron ribs of public improvement. The work must commence in earnest, and at once, for the tide of fortune is upon us, and we must take it at its flood, if we would have it bear us on to fortune. And when the undertaking is vigorously commenced, and citizens of all vigorously commenced, and citizens of all shades of politics work side by side for the THREE LOTS in Lawrence, suitable for millcommon good, the paltry abstractions which separated man from man will sink on the same for sale cheap by G. W. BROWN. into insignificance by comparison with the importance of the great work in which they are now engaged. Passion will cool down-reason regain her sway, and men will laugh over the olden time when neighbor's assayed to cut each other's throats upon matters in which they themselves were so little interested.

Two persons came into town a few days since and put up at the Topeka House, where they tarried over night, following morning they were arrested and taken back to Kansas City, Mo., from whence they had set out in a one horse buggy. From what we could learn, one of the persons belong to or was a clerk in a respectable firm in St. Louis, and had been sent west as a drummer and collector. He stated that he remembered landing at Kansas city on the 12th, since which time he recollected scarcely anything that had passed. It appears that he was taken care of by the "friend" who he w was traveling with him, immediately on his arrival at Kansas city, and taken to house of ill-fame, where he was drugged and robbed. To get clear of his victim. Smith, the man who practiced the villainy, persuaded him to take a trip through Kansas. While here, Smith kept him stupified with liquor and remarked that "the damned fool will die with the delirium tremens, if he did not stop drinking." Dr. J. B. Wheeler, of Palermo, also sto ping at the Topeka House, was called in to see the victim, and subsequently stated to us, that the man had, undoubtedly, been drugged. If these things are true, and we have good evidence of their truthfulness, this man Smith should be dealt again have an opportunity of practicing such things on another. Hanging would be too good.—Topeka Tribune.
